

PRODUCT TOUR · 4 MIN

What an AI call centre actually needs.

THE SHORT VERSION

Eight things, one console.

- 1 Voices: 21 Arabic voices on Sada, a Saudi model
- 2 Instructions: Write it with AI, or in Arabic
- 3 Functions: one JSON endpoint into your systems
- 4 Knowledge: price lists quoted exactly
- 5 Channels: phone, website widget, public link
- 6 Outbound: calling windows and a do-not-call list
- 7 Conversations: transcript, summary, outcome
- 8 Billing: per minute, no seats

THE PART MOST SKIP

Connecting it to your systems.

A function is one endpoint: the agent posts a name and arguments, you answer with JSON. No endpoint, and the function isn't offered at all, so the agent never promises a lookup it can't do.

 Functions 1 ^

Where a function call is sent. One endpoint for all of them — we post the name and the arguments, you switch on the name and answer with JSON, and whatever you send back is what the agent knows.

Without an endpoint these are not offered to the agent at all. That is deliberate: an agent told it can look something up, with nowhere to look, promises the caller something it cannot do.

check_availability

Use when the caller asks for a free slot in a department on a given day.

OPERATIONS

Built for a real line.

- ✓ Numbers from Twilio, or your own SIP trunk. STC and Mobily work.
- ✓ Outbound only inside the window you set.
- ✓ Never to a number on your do-not-call list.
- ✓ Stops itself when calls start failing in a row.
- ✓ A webhook to your CRM at the end of every call.

AFTER THE CALL

It writes up what happened.

Al Noor Clinics Reception RESOLVED 50s · $0.06

"...called to book a dental appointment for tomorrow afternoon. The agent successfully booked the appointment for him... The exact time of the appointment was not specified in the call."

The last line is the point. The outcome records what was actually said, not what the agent was supposed to achieve.
